“relevant child” means a child who is –

- (a) a child of both spouses; or

- (b) a single man who has cohabited with a single woman as if he were in law her husband for a period of not less than five years, immediately preceding the institution of proceedings under this Act or the termination of cohabitation, as the case may be.

- (2) The terms “single woman” and “single man” used with reference to the definition of “spouse” include widow or widower, as the case may be, or a divorcee.

3.—(1) Except as otherwise provided in this Act and subject to subsections (2) and (3) of this section and section 6, the provisions of this Act shall not apply after the death of either spouse and every enactment and rule of law or of equity shall continue to operate and apply in such case as if this Act had not been enacted.

Application of Act

(2) The death of either spouse shall not affect the validity or effect of anything done or suffered in pursuance of the provisions of this Act.

(3) If, while any proceedings under this Act are pending one of the spouses dies, the proceedings may be continued and be completed; and any appeal may be heard and determined and the Court may make such order as it thinks fit in the circumstances of the case as if the spouse had not died.

Except as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, the provisions of this Act shall have effect in place of the rules and presumptions of the common law and of equity to the extent that they apply to transactions between husband and wife in respect of property and, in cases for which provision is made by this Act, between husband and wife, and each of them, and third parties.

- (a) that the family home was inherited by one spouse;

MEMORANDUM OF OBJECTS AND REASONS

The present law does not provide for the equitable division of property between spouses upon the breakdown of marriage as the basic principle governing property rights is "you own what you buy". Where there is a dispute as to the ownership of property, proof of purchase or contribution to the purchase of the property in question is required. The emphasis on financial contribution places a wife who has never worked outside the home at an obvious disadvantage. There have also been practical difficulties regarding proof of contribution since records of expenditure are not usually kept and contribution is often indirect.

The present law is based on the separate property law concept which is embodied in the Married Women's Property Act of 1887. This concept has been abolished in many countries and new statutory rules have been introduced to determine the property rights of spouses on the breakdown of marriage.

The Government, aware of the need to reform the law relating to family property now seeks to enact provisions to provide new rules for the division of property between spouses upon a breakdown of their union.

In enacting these new provisions the Government is also aware of the social reality of men and women living together in common law unions. They build families together, they work together and they accumulate possessions together. When the union breaks down, the parties experience the same kinds of financial dislocation as if they were married. In our society legal solutions for the problems of family breakdown must address not only married couples, but also common law spouses, if they are to be effective. In enacting these new provisions cognizance is taken of the question of the division of property upon the breakdown of a common law union.

Consequently this Bill seeks—

- (a) to bring common law unions within the ambit of the provisions with respect to the division of property where there is a breakdown of the union; however, under the law, common law spouses must be single and have cohabited for a period of not less than five years;
- (b) to give the Supreme Court, the Family Court and the Resident Magistrates Court jurisdiction to hear all matters relating to property owned by either or both spouses;
- (c) to make provision for the family home to be equally divided except where such division would not be equitable;
- (d) to make provision for the Court to have the power to divide property owned by either or both spouses except the family home as mentioned in paragraph (c);

(e) to provide for—

- (i) ante and post nuptial agreements;
- (ii) declaration of property rights;
- (iii) determination of value and share of property;
- (iv) the manner in which property is to be divided;
- (v) Property and creditors;

- (vi) cases where the disposition of property is made to defeat the claim of a spouse or other party;
- (vii) proceedings of and orders that the Court may make in relation to property;

(f) to make consequential amendments to—

- (i) The Judicature (Family Court) Act;
